Interview with Kathryn C. Brown, President/CEO of the Internet Society (ISOC)

Kathryn C. Brown, is the new President and Chief Executive Officer of the Internet Society. She is a veteran of Internet policy development that have aided in the Internet's global expansion. At Verizon, she helped identify and navigate emerging digital issues. Earlier in her career, Kathy served in U.S. President Clinton's Administration where she was deeply involved in policy development. The E-Newsletter team had a chat with her recently in London.

Kathy Brown

Kathy: The Internet Society is non for profit and advocates an open internet that should remain open. The society has members and chapters in different parts of the globe and works with them to achieve her mission and vision. The Internet Society is very much interested in the growth of the internet. Another thing is, the Internet Society is interested about the Next Generation Leaders. These are young people that will become future leaders. The society encourages young people to develop and become mentors in future. The Internet Society works with the Internet Engineering Task Force (IETF) to develop technical standards and protocols that are used on the internet.
